CONCEPT NOTE

Environmental degradation, climate change, biodiversity loss, and unsustainable development practices pose urgent challenges to human societies and the planet. While these issues are often discussed in scientific and policy-oriented terms, they are equally rooted in ethical questions concerning human responsibility, moral values, intergenerational justice, and our relationship with the natural world. As a discipline that critically examines values, principles, and worldviews, Philosophy plays a vital role in shaping ethical attitudes toward the environment. A seminar coupled with a poster competition provides a platform for students, researchers, and the wider academic community to engage with these ethical dimensions, foster critical thinking, and promote environmentally responsible behavior.
